'We unintentionally revoked credentials on some older versions of Mac drivers,' said a HP spokesperson.. Here's how to work around the problem Hewlett Packard has now explained the recent spate of Mac printer problems that saw users being warned of 'malware' — but it hasn't yet solved it.. Step 2: Enter safe mode Safe mode, often Your Mac does not have malware, it's just got printer drivers that HP mistakenly asked Apple to block.. 'This caused a temporary disruption for those customers and we are working with Apple to restore the drivers.. If you're in that situation, there currently seems no better alternative than contacting HP support. A Real Guitar On My Phone

In the meantime, we recommend users experiencing this problem to uninstall the HP driver and use the native AirPrint driver to print to their printer.. While HP and Apple are reportedly working together to resolve the issue, users are still being prompted with warnings saying it 'will damage your computer.. from the menus Or press Command-Shift-G Remove the old printer driver and then add your printer againThis will clearly delete the printer driver, but what it then does is force your Mac to download a new copy.. framework ' In theory, then, this can just be un-revoked However, The Eclectic Light Company says that at time of writing, users are still reporting what appear to be related problems.. ' As previously reported, AirPrint is the answer if you need to actually print anything out.. These steps should fix the issue because HP has effectively undone its mistake According to The Eclectic Light Company, the problem was that what HP asked Apple to do was revoke its security certificate for the file 'HPDeviceMonitoring. 34bbb28f04 Sndvol32 Exe File
